KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE.

BELVERNON, PA., Nov. 27, '90.
DR. B. J. KENDALL CO.:
Gents—I would like to make known to those who are almost persuaded to use Kendall's Spavin Cure the fact that I think it is a most excellent Liniment. I have used it on a Blood Spavin. The horse went on three legs for three years when I commenced to use your Kendall's Spavin Cure. I used ten bottles on the horse and have worked him for three years since and has not been lame.
Yours truly, WM. A. CURL.

GERMANTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 2, 1889.
DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburgh Falls, Vt.
Gents: In praise of Kendall's Spavin Cure I will say, that a year ago I had a valuable young horse become very lame, hock enlarged and swollen. The horsemen about here (we have no Veterinary Surgeon here) pronounced his lameness Blood Spavin or Thoroughpin, they all told me there was no cure for it, he became about useless, and I considered him almost worthless. A friend told me of the merits of your Kendall's Spavin Cure, so I bought a bottle, and I could see very plainly great improvements immediately from its use, and before the bottle was used up I was satisfied that it was doing him a great deal of good. I bought a second bottle and before it was used up my horse was cured and has been in the team doing heavy work all the season since last April, showing no more signs of it. I consider your Kendall's Spavin Cure a valuable medicine, and it should be in every stable in the land. Respectfully yours,
EUGENE DEWITT.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors.

LOVE'S FOREVER.

"Then must we really part forever?"
Some rashly spoken word had chilled her,
And scornfully she turned away
From the soft speech whose potent sway
Had evening after evening thrilled her.

Responsive to the plaintive plea
That certified his heart's endeavor,
She glanced at him disdainfully,
And, cold as rolls the polar sea,
Her voice pronounced the word "Forever!"

A sob! A moan! With leaden feet
From the veranda he descended,
Trod ruefully the murky street
Praying to find a winding sheet,
And whatsoever with it blended.

"This woe must cease!" he said, then laid
His hand upon a dagger straightway;
A gasp! A shudder! Then the blade
Was pocketed and tracks were made
Back toward the cruel maiden's gateway.

A form rushed out, four arms did lock
As if they never meant to sever,
A simultaneous labial shock,
And twenty minutes by the clock
Had marked the bounds of Love's forever.

COURTSHIP.

A Glimpse Into a Paradise Where All Is Sunshine and Love.

The Diffident Lover, the Confident Lover, the Sudden Lover and the Lover Who Always Does the Right Thing at the Right Time.

When Tom, Dick or Harry sets out to court his Angelina is it "of malice prepense and aforethought," or does it all occur on the spur of the moment?

It has been a much discussed question, and one to be diversely answered as long as there are "many men of many minds." Each girl believes she knows just when she made the first impression; but the truth is very often the man himself cannot tell when the seed was planted nor how it germinated, and is surprised to find that a full-blown flower is abloom in his heart, sweetening and brightening the whole world for him.

There is certainly no royal road to success in love. It is as impossible to lay down exact rules of procedure in courtship as it would be to apply mathematics in calculating the probable course of a butterfly's flight. Even as the wind "bloweth where it listeth," so the lover's emotions vary and change—often against his will and better reason. The man who is very sure and calm in his courtship, who has no anxiety and is not sometimes assailed by doubt and wretchedness, is, obviously, not very deeply in love. Certainty and quietude may be the aftermath following marriage, but they are surely foreign to that anxious yet too brief season which precedes the period of bridesmaids, minister, congratulations and a wedding tour.

There are men who, finding themselves interested, plunge into a courtship as a diver takes his leap into the waves. He comes up breathless; but the very force of his first effort has carried him far on to success. He loses in delicacy, but succeeds by the very oddity of his way, or perhaps, because it is the unexpected that happens. To this type belonged the stranger who, traveling west with a slender girl graduate from Boston on her way to take charge of a school, proposed at the end of the trip that she should teach him how best to live his life, rather than the children how to spell. His straightforward assurance had its charm, and she exchanged her pupils for a husband at the end of the first scholastic term.

Others approach the point of proposal as a sensitive patient would take a prescribed sea bath when the north wind has chilled the waves. They advance to the very edge, but as the billow rolls up to their feet, they, afraid of the shock, draw back—only to again advance as the water recedes, and, once more, retreat precipitately as the breaker returns. So with the diffident lover. Who so brave as he when away from his fair? Who so determined to his fate? But as the moment approaches when he must "put it to the touch and win or lose it all," his courage ebbs away, and he thinks: "I'll wait a little while and make more sure." Lucky for the man if he can at last find such help as Dorothy gave her lover, who for ten long years tried weekly to propose, but always became frightened and turned the question into something else. At length in sheer desperation, she answered:

"No, I woan't be havin' the loan o' yo' nag; but for the Law' sake, Obadiah, if yer want to marry me, WHY doan't yer say so?"

Then comes the man who, as gracefully as the strong swimmer parts the waters, progresses through the intricacies of courtship, and arrives at the desired haven of acceptance safely and surely. He is comme il faut in every particular; he does the right thing always, and invariably in the right place. His attentions to every member of the family, from grandmother to baby sister, are just what they should be. His intentions are perfectly plain—and so are those of his lady love and of all her kin. He, she and they know that he will ask, she accept, and they approve; but it is proper that a certain semblance of the-young-man-in-love and the-young-girl-innocent should be maintained; so Angelo does all that is requisite and at last proposes with just the right amount of ardor and uncertainty in his voice and words. Seraphina behaves to perfection—blushes, hesitates and is coy, as is incumbent upon so fair and modest a maiden—but, finally, sweetly consents, "if mamma and papa will approve." These self-sacrificing parents, having long ago determined what a good thing the match will be, magnanimously give their permission, and all "goes merry as a marriage bell."

From these three kinds of courtship there are many variations—all of them pleasanter, perhaps, than the examples given—for Tom, Dick or Harry, honest fellows despite types and rules, following out their own theories, and believing that each one knows more about his own particular Angelina than any other man has ever known about any other girl. He tells himself he is not silly enough to be frightened or bashful or awkward; he is well aware of just what he is going to say and where and when he shall say it. He thinks, too, that he can be pretty certain of her answer (or he would not be so foolish as to ask), though, if she should make some few objections, he hopes and believes he knows just how to combat them successfully. So he lays out his plans while Angelina sleeps peacefully, dreaming, most probably, of him; and he retires to rest in a state of supreme self-satisfaction—and is likely to have visions of some other and hitherto forgotten girl.

The courtship begins and prospers somewhat slowly, as courtships will when carried on beneath alien eyes; but one day he calls and asks her to walk. Happily they are suburban and natural, so Angelina assents; she is lovely and light-headed, Tom gallant and gay. He knows of a path in a romantic piece of woods, a lovely bit of forest with fallen trees and broken ridges and a purling, winding brook—a little oasis of nature left in the desert of advancing civilization for just such happy pairs as this. They talk of the last dance they attended in the winter; he tries sentiment, but she insists on recalling the incidents of that evening in a very different way: "How very pleasant Dick Darcy was, and what a delightful dancer! his step quite suits mine"—which was not what Tom planned at all.

How can he make a point while hearing his rival praised?

In the midst of her chatter about the delights of the past season, she steps on a root running zigzag across the path, and hurts her foot. Instantly our swain is all sympathy and pity. Will she not show him where it was hurt? No, of course not; she could not do that, and, besides, how would it help the matter? Then he sighs and wishes it was her rounded chin or pretty hands, that he could make them well by an old recipe his mother had when he was a little child. She, never thinking, asks what it is, and when he says: "A kiss," she exclaims: "Oh!" and trips on ahead of him, blushing furiously, but feeling pretty happy after all.

This episode was not in Tom's plan, but he thinks it a good one and believes he has scored a point.

They come to a fallen tree; this Tom had remembered, and given it a prominent place in his proposed campaign. He would hold her hands and help her over and—but the girl vaults lightly across unassisted, and Tom says something rather bad under his breath as he thinks that there was a fine chance lost.

They walk along in the cool green shade until the brook is reached; then he gallantly puts his foot into the shallow water and tells Angelina to step on it and so pass dry shod. But she spies a piece of rock and makes a stepping stone of that, declaring that she could not think of crushing his foot beneath her weight. Tom looks at the slender figure and springy step and laughs at the idea of her hurting him, but groans inwardly as he thinks of this being another planned episode gone astray. The only results are a wet shoe and the bottom of his new trousers badly dabbled.

Angelina is sparkling as the sunshine, as enticing as beauty, good health and warm heart can make her; but Tom's courtship does not progress. She is a very will-o'-the-wisp along conversational paths; as he seems nearing the desired point, she is off and away on some other line of thought. He follows and tries to take the lead, but with the perversity of her youth and sex, she avoids the very thing she most would have, and will not allow him to say one word even verging on sentiment. At length Tom lapses into monosyllabic replies, and looks as he feels—very downcast and a little gloomy. She watches him furtively, and begins to take a less heartless tone. He is quick to see the change, so maintains his despondent manner, letting it gradually harden into austerity. As he becomes severe, she softens, until, declaring she is tired out, she throws herself on a green knoll, spreads out her pretty draperies and prepares herself to be propitiated, coaxed and courted.

Tom feels instantly that his chance has come, and, honest gentleman that he is, shows his joy in his face. He throws himself down quite near to her and falls to praising her dress, her hat, the fit of her gloves, the dainty chain around her slender throat. It is only the beginning, and soon love makes him eloquent, though his heart is beating furiously and he has forgotten every speech which he had prepared. No matter; her heart beats as fast as his and every throb pleads for him as he speaks—until at last he draws her toward him, lifts the drooping head, takes one long glance into the soft brown eyes and lets his lips touch hers in the first kiss of love. His veins throb, and, forgetting himself for an instant, he holds her so close and tight that she is frightened and begins to cry. Then he feels as if he were a criminal and pets and soothes her into quiet.

They sit there long, hand in hand, saying little, only feeling that the supreme good has come to them and that life is very beautiful.

So it is that some men court and to some women is granted the boon of an exquisite association of blue skies, green woods, mossy knolls and running water with their hearts' bright history. To all such the face of nature is forever beatified, for it is hallowed by the sweetest recollections that belong to the glory of youth, beauty and love.

Some time ago the question was asked of many writers: "What is the happiest time of a woman's life?" Perhaps if they had answered truthfully they would have said: "The days of courtship, when I was wooed by the man I loved the very best." For, though dearer and deeper joys may come, there is nothing so beautiful, so joyous and natural as "Love's young dream."
—Lee C. Hardy, in Once a Week.

SUMMER SOCIETY NOTES.

THERE are families living in Bar Harbor cottages who spend $25,000 in a season.

WATERMELON parties are in season in Texas. They include a moonlight ride to some plantation, unlimited watermelon and a dance.

IT is said that the five leading hotels of Saratoga take in an aggregate of $2,000,000 a month during the busy season.

BENEATH a footbridge that is a favorite meeting place for South Bethlehem (Pa.) lovers, a swarm of yellow jackets have built their nest, and between Cupid's darts and theirs the young lovers are said to have a most interesting time.

ONE way the summer girls at Bar Harbor have of scraping acquaintance with the young men is through sham mishaps while out riding. The young men are not deceived, and even the intelligent saddle horses are beginning to understand the game.

THAT CITY BOARDER.

Why the Mardons Are Glad They Took Her for the Summer.

It would be hard to find a prettier, more cozy home in the whole county than the Mardon cottage on this bright summer morning. The swaying branches of the gnarled old apple tree, beside the open kitchen door, held full many a feathered warbler, whose music, fresh and sweet, seemed calling all to rejoice.

But the mistress of the little home heeded not the invitation. These summer mornings were very trying to her, in more ways than one. The kitchen, although picturesque to the beholder, was decidedly warm and uncomfortable; there was an ironing and some baking to attend to, besides dinner to prepare for the hungry harvesters.

"Only one pair of hands to attend to all this; no wonder I feel tired. Plenty of men in the field, but no girl to help in the house. If I were a girl again, I believe—"

A loud shriek from baby interrupted her soliloquy, and hastily making her way to the sitting-room, a sad trial of her patience awaited her. The little boy, on awakening had grasped the tablecloth in order to gain his somewhat unsteady feet, and frightened by the havoc he had made, screamed lustily.

"Oh dear! almost time to begin preparing dinner; will this child never stop crying?"

At last, after many efforts on the mother's part, Freddie ceased fretting, and establishing his babyship on the floor with a basket of playthings, Mrs. Mardon started for the kitchen and was soon busily engaged in the prosaic work of preparing vegetables.

"Milly, I have a letter from Mr. Colburn; he wishes to send his daughter here for a few months. He will pay well for her board and we need the money. I want to begin laying away something to buy a farm for Steve; he would be a good deal steadier if he had something of the kind to look forward to, I think."

A look of impatience, blending into sorrow, came into the wife's face. To her the prospect of a boarder was anything but pleasant, and at the mention of Steve her heart was filled with a sharp pang, the keen sorrow which a mother feels as she realizes that the hopes which have for years sustained her, that of her son taking an honored and useful place in the world, are to be dashed to the ground.

"Well, I had better write and tell her to come. Her father says she didn't want to go to the seaside with the rest of the family. She is pretty particular, and you better fix up the spare chamber, I guess."

"I will do the best I can, but there is so much work to do now it seems impossible for me to do more. But I suppose we must take her to board."

"Why, of course, Milly; ready money isn't so plentiful that we can afford to miss the chance of making a little extra when we can."

He was soon on his way to the field. Alone with her thoughts, Mrs. Mardon indulged in some bitter reflections. The prospect of a fastidious young lady boarder was anything but pleasant to the weary, overworked wife and mother.

"Frank is so anxious to make money he thinks of nothing else. If he had been different, more lenient with Steve's boyish pranks, it would have been better. Perhaps if I had spent more time talking with him and encouraging him he would have been steadier; but I've always been too tired to take the time when my work was done, and now the children seem growing away from me. Meta is determined to keep up an intimacy with the Downings, and Tom Downing is not the man I should want her to marry. I am sorry she went to learn a trade, for her work takes her around too much, and I need her help at home."

Light footsteps were now heard and the subject of the mother's reflections entered, a fair-haired, laughing girl of eighteen years.

"Dear! how warm this kitchen is. Do hurry with the dinner, mother. Father is coming with the men from the field and I've got to get back as soon as I can."

"Dinner is ready, daughter. Can't you help me a little?"

"I have got to sew a ruffle in my dress. Where's Lizzie? I should think she might help; she has nothing to do but go to school, while I am at work all the time."

"Lizzie hasn't come from school yet. I think I can get along now very well," and the foolishly indulgent mother hurriedly dished the food as the men entered the kitchen.

Naturally selfish and indolent, Meta shirked all the household tasks possible. She was not utterly heartless, but so accustomed was she to seeing her mother at work, that it seemed quite the proper thing to have her assume all the work and responsibility. It was seldom that Mrs. Mardon required any service of her daughters, and when this was the case, important duties usually demanded their attention elsewhere. To be sure she had entered a feeble protest when Meta wished to learn the dressmaker's trade; told her she needed her help at home, but in the end the girl carried her point. It was natural she should want to earn money to buy the pretty dresses, the thousand and one trifles in which a young girl delights, so the mother reasoned.

The guest chamber was in readiness for the expected occupant by the next evening, and was as inviting as cleanliness and simple, dainty furnishing could make it.

Meta was to go to the station for the guest, an errand which she performed with alacrity.

It was twilight when Desiree Colburn reached the farmhouse and, as she went directly to her room, the family saw little of the stylish young lady whom each confidently expected.

"She has a beautiful traveling dress and brought two trunks with her," Meta announced when they were alone.

"Humph! a stuck-up city girl likely, who thinks country people are nobody." Steve retorted, as he started on his regular evening walk to the one store the place afforded. With a sigh his mother looked after him.

The next morning Mrs. Marden, busy as usual in the kitchen, was startled by the appearance of the boarder.

"I intended to get up to breakfast, but overslept. I am not used to early morning hours. If you don't mind, I'll take a bowl of bread and milk. No, nothing else."

In a few minutes Miss Desiree was cozily established on the back porch, the baby by her side. Very fresh and pretty she looked in her morning gown, her fluffy bangs blown and ruffled by the soft breeze, her eyes aglow, and a faint color in her fair cheeks.

"I have finished my breakfast now, and with your permission I will take baby with me for a walk in the orchard."

The permission was readily given, Mrs. Mardon wondering meanwhile if this was merely a freak or a desire to relieve her from the child's care.

In a week Desiree Colburn had made friends with all the members of the household. Simple and unaffected in manner, her sunny disposition made a welcome addition to the family.

"Mrs. Mardon, you must grant me one favor to-day," she said, appearing in the kitchen one sultry morning, the second week of her arrival.

"What is it?" with a faint attempt to smile. The headache, which since dawn had racked the housekeeper's throbbing temples, seemed to grow more painful each hour.

"Please go into the sitting-room and lie down on the sofa. I have darkened it and put plenty of pillows where you can rest until your headache is over."

"Oh, but I can't think of such a thing. The work is to be done, the dinner to get. It would never do."

"I will get dinner and do what is to be done. It will be a pleasant change for me."

"You get dinner?" with an incredulous glance at the white, jeweled fingers.

"Yes; I assure you that I am an excellent cook. I really am determined to have my own way in this matter, so you might as well make up your mind to rest for a short time."

So with many misgiving Mrs. Mardon went to the sitting-room and Desiree tripped lightly around the room, on household tasks intent.

But the dinner was well cooked, and, refreshed by her much-needed rest, Mrs. Mardon sat in the low rocker by the kitchen door, her hands occupied with mending, when Meta came home with the announcement:

"There is to be a picnic at Long Grove. Where is Miss Colburn?"

"Out in the orchard, I think. She was kind enough to get dinner to-day, because I had a headache. She is a dear, thoughtful girl."

"Why, how strange! I never dreamed that she knew how to do anything of the kind."

Meta made her way to the orchard and announced the picnic.

"Yes, it will be very nice; we shall all enjoy it, I imagine. It will be a fine change for your mother; she looks as if she needed recreation."

"Mother? Why she never goes to picnics!" And Meta looked her astonishment.

"Why not?" with a smile.

"Well, she doesn't care to go—that is—I don't think she would care to go, she is always so busy, you know," said Meta, with some confusion.

"I know she is busy, but we can all help her more than we have done. Many hands make light work, you know, and I am sure she will enjoy going."

"But mother is so set in her ideas. There will be a number of people there, and she never wants me to go with anybody, she is so strict."

"My good times are always shared with my mother; I should not enjoy them unless they were."

If Meta admired anyone it certainly was Desiree Colburn, and it was with a glad heart that Mrs. Mardon listened to her daughter's urgent invitation; from whence it was inspired she knew.

In the busy days which followed Meta and Lizzie were brought to see their selfishness toward the patient mother, and this was accomplished so quietly by the example and well-chosen words of the guest that they hardly knew how they came to a realization of their errors.

The picnic passed pleasantly. Miss Colburn joined in the different games, and it was a tired but happy group who took their way homeward.

"Well, did you enjoy the picnic?" was the question Desiree asked, when she was alone with Meta.

"I never had so good a time in my life."

"Then your pleasure was not marred by your mother's presence?"

"Oh, Miss Colburn, I suppose you think I am the most selfish girl in the world. I feel ashamed when I think how I treated mother."

"Not so very selfish but a little thoughtless, perhaps. Time yet to make amends, Meta."

The summer passed all too soon. Little by little Steve's attention was attracted by what was going on during the home evenings. The evenings at the store were given up, to his mother's delight. A literary society was formed and the young man became a member. A fresh impetus was given to reading and study among the young people, and when, years after, Desiree Colburn heard Steve Mardon, then a successful lawyer, declare that he owed his success in life to her encouragement and efforts during the summer spent at the farm, she felt indeed that her reward was great.

"And to think I felt so sorry that I was going to have a summer boarder," Mrs. Mardon often said. "Owing to her the girls have developed into noble women. Steve has made a man of himself, and my load has been lightened. Truly, in my home I have 'entertained an angel unaware.'"—Mary C. Parsons, in Home.

Cut Flowers by Mail.

Cut flowers are constantly sent through the mails, but seldom in such a fashion as to preserve their bloom and freshness. To effect this, pack in a light wooden box, not using cardboard; line the box with wadding or cotton-batting, laying over this a sheet of tissue paper; then lay the flowers, not on top of each other, but in rows side by side, the blossoms of each row on the stems of their neighbors; pack closely, otherwise the flowers will be displaced and injured in the journey. Before packing they should stand in water several hours in order to absorb moisture enough to keep them from withering. It is not well to sprinkle them too heavily after they are in the box, for without air this is likely to produce mildew.—Hartford Courant.

BUT THAT WAS LONG AGO.

One day, 'twas long ago,
I met a maiden fair to see,
A maiden fair and dear to me:
But that was long ago.

She was so fair, I know;
How fair she was I cannot say,
But fairer than a morn of May;
But that was long ago.

And we did vow, I know,
That some day we would wed,
Following where sly Cupid led;
But that was long ago.

The years went slowly by:
I know not where they went,
Into what other forms were blent—
Perhaps into a sigh!

And then we met, I know;
But all the hopes of youth had fled,
And all the love of youth was dead:
But that was long ago.

And not a word, I vow,
Of all the past by us was said—
We each some other one had wed—
But that was long ago.

ON A MERRY-GO-ROUND.

It Started in a Whirl and Ended in a Wedding.

"There is no use of talking, Beulah," Amy Anstruther said, as she buttoned up her ulster. "Anything like a matrimonial negotiation is so distasteful to me that I would not marry the king of Siam to please anybody."

"The king of Siam—well, no!" said Beulah, smiling. "But Robert Craig is not a Mongolian, my dear. He is rich and good looking and clever as can be."

"Bah!" said Amy, as she knotted her vail above the fluffy coil of blonde hair. "I almost hate him already."

"That is what he said about you!" Beulah observed, coolly.

"Then he has some sense," Amy replied. "Come, Beulah, let us alone! There is no use of trying to strike an Anstruther-Craig alliance just for the sake of raking up the family arms. What do we Americans care for the duke of Anstruther and the earl of Craig? My grandfather kept a shop, you know, and Henry Craig was a wholesale shoe manufacturer. You might as well let us go on being common. There! I'm all ready. Where's Dicky?"

An infant warwhoop in the hall was her reply.

With the small author of that yell she went to the merry-go-round pavilion, but the ring of flying animals had just started, and Amy and Dicky sat down to wait. Near them was a little girl, a perfect fairy, in white, with long, floating hair and pleading eyes.

"Please, Uncle Bert, won't you let me go?" she coaxed a gentleman beside her. "I won't get hurt. See! There's Nellie Graham riding a camel all alone. Please let me go!"

"Charlotte, you mustn't ask me, dear. Your mother told me to take care of you, and I don't know what she thinks of merry-go-rounds. I couldn't think of letting you go alone."

The child was silent; but Amy saw great tears rolling down her cheeks, and said, very quickly: "If you don't mind, your little girl can go with our Dicky. Dicky, you'll take care of her, won't you, dear? Dicky's an old merry-go-rounder."

"Oh!" cried Charlotte. "May I, Uncle Bert?"

"Do you think it is all right?" the gentleman inquired, looking at Amy.

"Oh, yes; it is perfectly safe. Let her go. She will enjoy it."

The gong rung, and Dicky held out out his hands. "The Little Fisher-maiden" was ground out gayly from the organ, and Charlotte mounted the camel.

Amy found her companion delightful. It was five o'clock when the children came back, with their tickets all gone.

"Come back to-morrow," said Dicky, hospitably. "We come here every afternoon, don't we, Aunt Amy?"

Amy blushed.

"I am certainly very much obliged to you, Master Dick," said the gentleman, warmly.

Amy bowed rather nervously and hurried away.

The merry-go-round grew more and more attractive. Dicky spent a child's fortune on it, and Charlotte rode every animal in the caravan. Amy and "Uncle Bert," in the meanwhile, talked and—took care of the children.

"Suppose we try it this time?" he said, one afternoon, weeks later, when the children mounted their wooden steeds.

"Would you like to?" Amy said, smiling. "Do you prefer an ostrich or a lion?"

"Oh, I shall stand up, thank you!" he replied. "How shall you ride?"

"In a sleigh, if you please. I am not so rash as to mount one of those fiery animals."

The bell struck and the organ began to grind out "Rock-a-by, Baby."

Amy laughed in spite of herself. What would Beulah say if she knew?

Round and round they went.

"How do you like it?" Amy asked.

He shook his head.

"I feel like a singing top," he said, dubiously.

"Better sit down," she said, but he not move.

Once more they spun round.

Amy's escort uttered a low exclamation and staggered against the feet of the horse.

"I am horribly giddy," he said, faintly.

"Take care!" she cried, reaching out her hand. "This way!"

He took a step toward her. His face was deadly pale.

"Good heavens!" he cried. "How horrible this is!"

The next moment there was a cry from the spectators in the pavilion. He had fallen at the feet of the horse and the flying wheel flung him off with terrible force upon the floor.

There was wild excitement in a moment.

Amy felt herself getting deathly sick when she saw him lying there motionless.

The organ stopped. Everybody rushed to the scene of the disaster.

"He is badly hurt, I'm afraid," Amy heard some one say. "Who is he? Where does he live?"

"He is my Uncle Bert," said little Charlotte, bursting into tears. "We live a long way from here, down at Ventnor."

"Take him to a hotel," some one suggested.

"This gentleman is a friend of mine," said Amy, with a sudden resolution. "Will some one call a carriage from the beach? I will take him to my sister's house."

The poor fellow never spoke or moved till long after he had been undressed and put to bed in Mrs. Stuyvesant's spare bedroom.

Beulah was out when Amy arrived. When she heard what had happened she simply said:

"Well, upon my word, Amy! That is like you. Who is he?"

"I—I really don't know," Amy replied, with a vivid blush; "but I am sure he is a gentleman."

Beulah stared and went up to look at the poor man who was lying on the bed with concussion of the brain. The doctor was with him, and a nurse whom Amy had got somewhere.

Beulah looked at the pale face, with its regular features and close-cut, curly brown hair, and she uttered an exclamation of surprise.

Amy was coming upstairs. She slipped out to meet her and caught her by the shoulders.

"See here!" she cried, whirling her around. "Do you know who that is you have got in there? It is Robert Craig."

"Beulah Stuyvesant!"

"I am telling you the truth. That is his little niece downstairs. I thought I had seen the child before."

Amy turned red and pale again.

"We must send word to his sister," she said, demurely. "Beulah, I—I hope you will be very careful what you say about Mr. Craig."

Beulah smothered a laugh, at which Amy frowned sternly, and went into the room with a bowl of ice which she was carrying.

Robert Craig was exceedingly ill. He recovered slowly, though Amy nursed him, and it was something to make a man better to see her flitting softly about the room in her pretty blue chambray morning gown, with its frills of snowy embroidery.

"Miss Amy," he said, one morning, when she brought in a pretty blue and white Satsuma bowl, "you have never told me your last name."

"It is Anstruther," she said with a sly little smile.

"Good heavens!" he cried. "What a fool I have been!"

"There! there!" she said. "You are spilling your broth."

"Do you know," he went on, "I once refused to be introduced to you? My aunt, Mrs. Stewart Stuyvesant—"

"Yes, I know!"

"She wanted me to marry you."

"How absurd—wasn't it?"

"Do you think so?" he said anxiously. "I don't."

Amy blushed furiously.

"You are to be quiet, you know," she said.

"I won't be quiet.—I can't. I lie here every day, looking at you with a longing that is eating my heart out. I want to know what you are going to do with me when you get me well?"

"Take you on the merry-go-round," said Amy, flippantly.

"Never!" he said, pushing away his broth. "Are you going to marry me? Because, if you aren't I may as well lie down and die now when it will be easy for me."

"You are not going to die now," she said, softly. He reached for her hand and drew her down.

"I love you," he whispered, looking full into her fair face. "Will you marry me, Amy?"

Her answer must have pleased him for his face shone radiantly, and when Charlotte came in a little later with a bouquet for Uncle Bert, he said, proudly:

"See here, Puss! Come and kiss your new auntie."—Saturday Night.

A NOVEL THINKING-BOX.

The Theater as a Place to Lay Plans for Business Schemes.

A certain active business man has discovered a new use for the theater. He is an inveterate theater-goer and a well-known first-nighter at both dramatic and operatic events, says the New York Recorder. It has always surprised his friends, however, to discover that he knows comparatively little about theatrical matters, despite his generous patronage of the drama. He explained this to a questioning friend the other night: "I never go to the theater," he said, "to hear the play or the opera. I simply go there to think over my business. There is something in the performances, of whatsoever character they may be, that enables me to distract my mind completely from all my surroundings. No one can break in upon me as they can do if I am at home, and I can sit and give myself over completely to the consideration of business while the performance is going on. I tell you," he added enthusiastically, "I have thought out some of my best business schemes while sitting in the glare of the footlights. I owe a great deal of my fortune to the advantages of the theater."

HINTS FOR THE KITCHEN.

NEVER put salt on a steak until after it is cooked.

THE lid of a saucepan should never be raised over a smoky fire.

BEFORE broiling fish rub the gridiron with a piece of fat to prevent its sticking.

THE earthy taste often found in fresh water fish can be removed by soaking in salt and water.

FRIED fish is very good turned in salted flour, or salted egg and bread crumbs, and then put into boiling-hot fat to get brown.

ALL sorts of vessels and utensils may be purified from long retained smells of any kind by rinsing them out well with charcoal powdered after they have been scoured with sandsoap.

A FULL vote means 1000 Democratic majority. Get the whole vote out.

SECRETARY BLAINE is back at his post in Washington, in apparent good health and Harrison's followers will again be uneasy for fear the presidential bee will be buzzing in his bonnet.

DEMOCRATS beware of spurious tickets. The Republicans in this county have conducted this campaign on the "fake" plan and they will be using all sorts of "fakes" up until the last moment.

IF everything was straight about the State Treasurer's office why is the cashier Livsey, away. The Senate may whitewash the principal but they cannot get the cashier within the limits of the state to testify.

NEVER were the finances of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania so rotten as to-day; never were the people so loud in their demand for an Auditor General and a State Treasurer who will get at the truth and let no guilty man escape.

IT was bad enough to rob the state, but it was a good deal worse to steal $420,000,00 of the monies the state had set aside for the education of her children in the common schools. That fund at least should have been held sacred.

IN the country districts teams should be provided to get the aged and infirm to the polls. Those having teams should give one day's work for the good of the country in getting out the vote. A man with a team is worth a dozen talking politics.

WHAT a fine set of triplets are the names on the draft, a fac-simile of which is published on this page. Honest John Bardsley in the penitentiary, G. W. Marsh fled to escape and M. S. Quay. The g. o. p. has a fine category of patriotic statesmen.

LAST week President Harrison received as a gift, a cask of Scotch whiskey from Andrew Carnegie, who is at present at Cluny Castle, Scotland. It will take several "jiggers" of the stuff to brace Benjamin up after hearing the news from the elections next week.

THE Senate is still in session and there is no probability of its doing anything until after the election when it will make a report whitewashing Boyer and McCamant. Should they do anything else Boyer and McCamant would kick and there would be no telling who would land in the "soup." There is nothing like "protection" to Republican rascality.

THE Republicans in the north of the county are asking Democrats to vote for Judge Barker, as a compliment and are even offering to trade votes on Sheriff for votes on Judge. Let Remocrats beware of all trades and vote the straight ticket. It is an old dodge of the Pepublicans in this county to have a candidate on their ticket for trading purposes.

THE New York Court of Appeals on Wednesday, at Albany, rendered a decision affirming the judgment of the lower court, which invalidates the will of the late Samuel J. Tilden. Mr. Tilden was one of the best lawers in the United States but he was not able to make a will that would stand the pickings of a lot of lawyers when there was millions in it.

THE prevailing impression among the people seems to be that the Constitutional convention, if held, would be a costly affair while its capacity for doing good would be extremely doubtful. The present constitution is good enough if our legislatures would pass laws to compel its observance, but as long as Boss Quay rules the roost there is not much likelihood of their doing so.

IN the Bedford—Somerset Judicial District the Republican conferees have, up to this time, failed to agree on a candidate for judge, the Bedford county delegates voting for Senator Longenecker, while the Somerset conferees remain steadfast to their candidate, Francis J. Koozier. It looks very much as if the Democratic candidate, John M. Reynolds, of Bedford, would be elected.

WHEN the Governor, says the Philadelphia Herald issued his proclamation calling an extra session of the Senate to investigate the charges against the State Treasurer and the Auditor General the Republican papers at once proclaimed it an effort to make policical capital. A strong and united effort was made to decry the extra session as uncalled for and to arrange for a policy of obstruction. But when it was found that public sentiment was strongly with the Governor the policy of obstruction was abandoned, and for it was substituted a united effort to make it appear that the charges preferred by the Governor had not been substantiated.

The case against State Treasurer Boyer has been closed. All the evidence is in, and despite the Republican efforts to belittle it, the testimony has disclosed that Mr. Boyer's recklessness and desire to favor Bardsley in direct violation of the laws is responsible for the loss of $420,000. It has also been disclosed that the law which compels County Treasurers to make quarterly returns is not enforced, and that Livsey and not Boyer was the practical boss of the State Treasury.

The Governor did not charge Mr. Boyer with personal dishonesty. All the charges advanced have been substantiated by Mr. Boyer's own testimony. The latter has admitted that he knowingly and purposly violated the law. Even his warmest supporters will not dare to claim that he has not been indifferent and careless. Instead of trying to live up to the law he has shown a studied effort to disregard it. All that the Governor has advanced against the State Treasurer he has confessed to. This alone justifies the extra session, and although both the State Treasurer and the Auditor General may be whitewashed by a Republican Senate, the people will heartily support the Governor in his effort to break up the reckless and pernicious system which has so long prevailed in both departments.

MR. TILDEN, the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, believes in investing the state's money in bonds that would pay interest to the state, while Mr. Morrison, the Republican candidate, believes in loaning it out to irresponsible banks that pay no interest to the state but to the Treasury Ring. That is how the state's money is being used in certain banks to make money for a lot of prominent Republican leaders. If you like Republican methods vote for Morrison for Treasurer. The people of this outraged commonwealth should as one man march to the polls and deposit their ballots for honest candidates, such as Wright and Tilden, so that thievery and corruption around the State Treasury, and the sources of supply, be stamped out.

THE voters of this state should cut this out and post it in a conspicuous place. It is from the Philadelphia Ledger, that old conservative Republican journal:

It is indispensably necessary that the "spoils" system should be struck by a crushing defeat in Pennsylvania. It is for the voters of the state now to judge—now that the issue is joined as to the deliverance in the resolutions of both conventions—which party and which nominees are most likely to strike the blow that will defeat and stamp out the system. Is it the organization that shows a disposition to confuse and belittle the vital issues in the state canvass—or is it that opposing party which goes at the important work in the clearest, most direct, earnest and energettic way?

SOME people pity while others despise the misfortunes of the poor dupe who, with an overwhelming confidence in his own smartness undertakes to outwit a three card monte man at his own game. His credulity however, can only be equaled by the landlord, who at an election for judge marches to the polls and votes for a Prohibition candidate, with the idea that he is making fair weather for himself in the future. When Prohibition gets license by the throat there will be no exceptions, it will be "die dog or eat the hatchet" with all of them.

A CIRCULAR purporting to come from the headquarters of the Dealers' Protective Association, but really from the Republican State committee, has been sent to merchants throughout the State. It calls on them to support the Republican candidates because they represent the party that favors the repeal of the mercantile tax laws. The fact of the matter is Governor Pattison in two messages to the Republican legislature of 1885 and 1887 declared for the repeal of these laws, but his suggestions were entirely ignored.

NEXT Tuesday elections will be held in eleven states, the most interesting ones being in Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York, Iowa and Massachusetts. With the exception of New York, they are all Republican states but such is the decay in the Republican party that it requires a Herculean effort this year to hold its own. The loss of any of these states will be a severe set-back on the Republicans in entering the canvas for 1892 and will correspondingly increase Democratic hopes.

THERE is no doubt about the money being stolen from the state treasury, but Boyer and McCamant expect to get off from their responsibility on the plea of "custom," to disobey the law, that their predecessors had done the same thing. When it becomes a "custom" to hold public officers to a strict accountability and a "custom" to give faithless officials a term in the penitentiary it will be all the better for the people.

LAST week $23,000 was raised by the tariff protected manufacturers of Pittsburg to help elect McKinley, in Ohio. Nothing but money can save McKinley, the apostle of protection, and the leaders of the g. o. p. are frying all the fat out of the manufacturers that they can.

When JOHN BARDSLEY went to JAIL he had collected the following moneys for the COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, which he had not paid over:

Personal property tax, (1890)	$ 622,013.11
Personal property tax, (1891)	289,232.96
License tax, (1890)	367,604.18
License tax, (1891)	1,497.54
Municipal loans tax, (1890)	86,030.80
Total	$1,366,378.50

About $1,000,000.00 of this had been in his hand since August 1st, 1890, and the AUDITOR GENERAL and STATE TREASURER had taken no legal steps to collect it, though it was their duty to do so on October 1, 1890.

Most of the above money JOHN BARDSLEY had in the Keystone Bank.

The city of Philadelphia has also lost about $600,000.00 in the same institution.

None of the experts have yet been able to discover and report where this money went.

The due bill, above, shows that BARDSLEY got $8,877.00 from the Bank on NOVEMBER 29TH, 1889, and sent to QUAY.

QUAY collected the money through his bank at Beaver; and when the certificate was sent on to the KEYSTONE BANK paid it.

WHERE DID THIS MONEY COME FROM?

Why did BARDSLEY send it to QUAY?

On the 2nd November, 1889, AUDITOR GENERAL McCAMANT sent the money for the MAGISTRATE'S costs in Philadelphia to Bardsley—over $30,000.00.

BARDSLEY deposited it in the KEYSTONE BANK, and on the 29th of November, 1889, he, (Bardsley) paid $1,575 to H. N. GRAFFEN, a clerk to Auditor General McCamant.

ON THE SAME DAY he sent this $8,877 to QUAY!!!

Of the persons whose names appear on the above certificate as drawer, payee and endorser, G. W. MARSH is a FUGITIVE.

JOHN BARDSLEY is in JAIL.

M. S. QUAY is in charge of the REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE trying to elect Gregg and Morrison to succeed McCamant and Boyer, and to displace William Redwood Wright with George D. McCreary.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct., 24th, 1891. Senator Faulkner, who was one of the Democratic missionary party which recently travelled through the northwest, is now in Washington. He is not a man who allows his enthusiasm to run away with his judgment; therefore his impressions of the political situation in that section are worthy of the most careful consideration. He says: "One of the most encouraging things for the Democracy in the west is that the young, active, go-headed men, many of whom have been raised as Republicans and whose family associations have all been with that party, are becoming Democrats on the tariff issue. Heretofore they have been too busy developing new regions and attending to their business enterprises to devote much time to politics. Now they are taking hold of politics and it is the principle of tariff reform that they believe in and will work for. The McKinley law was constructed against the interests of the great northwest, and the active men, with little regard to what their former political affiliations may have been, want relief from the burdens imposed by the Republican tariff policy. On the silver question the people of the west are divided in opinion, as are we of the east, but they all agree on the tariff question. The Democrats all over the country are of one mind on this; therefore it is the national issue. The Democrats in that section have not had good working organization long enough to warrant us in expecting that we can carry in 1892 all those States which are naturally coming into the Democratic column. We shall probably carry two of the new States in 1892, and we will gradually become the dominant party of the northwest. One disadvantage we labor under in that section is that the Republicans have most of the leading morning papers. That will be overcome in time, but in spite of it the tariff question is rapidly recruiting the Democratic party."

Senator Eustis, who has just returned from Massachusetts, thinks the Democrats are certain to re-elect Gov. Russell and that there is a bright prospect of Senator Dawes being succeeded by a Democrat when his term expires in 1893.

Whether Commissioner of Pensions Raum has resigned or not continues to be a mooted question, although the majority, including some of his personal friends, believe that he has, but that it will not be announced nor accepted until after the State elections. Raum continues to deny that he has resigned and to assert that he enjoys the confidence of Secretary Noble and Mr. Harrison; meanwhile it is worthy of note that neither of the three Pension Office employes whose dismissal Raum asked for, has been dismissed, although one of them has resigned, it is stated, voluntarily. The man who resigned was not one of those who furnished Secretary Noble with affidavits charging young Mr. Raum with having offered to get them promotions for a cash consideration. Everybody here is sick and tired of this whole Raum business, and Republicans do not hesitate to say publicly that they wish the administration would kick Raum out.

The bit of "jingoism" displayed by the administration on alleged private information that England was about to gobble up the Hawaiian Islands with the consent of the present rulers of the islands, was unexpectedly but effectually settled by a gentleman who visited Washington this week. This gentleman was Mr. A. S. Cleghorn, the Collector General of Customs of the Hawaiian Islands, and father of the heir apparent to the Hawaiian throne, who said: "I have assured the President and the State Department that no government is so close to Hawaii as the United States, in spite of our trade with you being somewhat damaged by your new tariff law and that there is no thought among our people, who are perfectly satisfied with our present status, of anything even looking toward British supremacy on the islands."

Numerous prominent Government officials are on the anxious bench, because of an undefined sort of an understanding which exists here that there is to be a general re-organization of the administration soon after the State elections, and that all of those who have not proved themselves efficient political workers, are to be made to walk the plank in order that Mr. Harrison may take care of the workers upon whom he relies for a re-nomination. Everything is to be politics from this on, and the hustlers who left Washington in disgust in 1889 because they were not recognized by Mr. Harrison, are to be recalled and given the choice places at the public table.

It is learned that the reason Secretary Foster delayed going to Ohio until the first of this week, was that he was waiting for a big corruption fund, which Mr. Wanamaker, Chairman Clarkson and others have been quietly raising for him to put where it would do the most good to the g. o. p. This money is all to be disbursed by Mr. Foster and will not go through the State committee. M.

Vote for or Against.

The Philadelphia Record speaks thus of the proposed Constitutional Convention:

"It is evident that the vote in favor of a Constitutional Convention will be very small. The people of Pennsylvania do not desire a Constitutional Convention at this time. This has been seen by their indifference to the choice of delegates to the convention, and in many other significant ways. No considerable body of citizens have expressed themselves in favor of the convention since the subject was first suggested to this day.

"Yet, while the vote in favor of the conventtion will be small, there are sneaking hopes of carrying it through in failure of its opponents to record their votes. Such a result would be deplorable. The work of a convention summoned by a handful of votes would meet with but little consideration from the public. The people would be put to the trouble and expense of holding an election to defeat possible amendments, when this might be avoided by voting down the convention now. If all who are opposed to a convention should take care to record their votes in the negative it would be defeated by an overwhelming majority."

Through a Burning Trestle.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., October 25.—A train of thirteen cars loaded with coal was wrecked on the Columbus and Western railroad near Goodwater yesterday morning. As the train rounded a curve within a few yards of Hatchett creek the engineer saw the trestle approach to the bridge on fire. It was too late to stop and he pulled the throttle open to attempt to cross by sheer force of speed.

The engine and two cars got across safely but the third went down nearly fifty feet and the others followed. The rear car was the caboose with Conductor Rice and Flagman Crawford on Board. Both were killed and their bodies burned with the car. Rice leaves a wife and two children in Columbus, Ga. Crawford was single and also lived in Columbus. In his efforts to save the men who went down, engineer Hendrix was severely burned. The coal is on fire and still burning.

The Floods in England.

The floods in England, as a result of the recent two weeks of successive heavy gales, continue to do a great amount of damage. The river Thames, for instance, in some places extends for a mile or so beyond its banks. The town of Eton and many of the streets of Windsor are impassable, and punts are being used to convey people from house to house. A telegram from Milford Haven says that a small row boat, containing three soldiers who had been upon a pleasure trip, capsized there to-day. All three of the boat's occupants were drowned.

GREAT FALLS, Mont., Oct. 27.—Word has reached here of the killing of some laboring men on the Pacific extension of the Great Northern Railway. They were in the employ of a contractor named O'Brien, whose work is about twenty miles west of the summit of the Rockies. The foreman had ordered them to clean up a blast hole containing some powder which exploded, killing some instantly and wounded several others. Two of them have died. The next day a civil engineer named Jarrett was killed by flying rock near the scene of the accident.

NEWS AND OTHER NOTINGS.

Every Patriot
should read a good newspaper. In the selection of a newspaper many considerations should govern. First, it should be one that endeavors to give all the news without prejudice. It should be neatly printed on good paper. It should be independent—in favor of all that is good, upright, clean. Such a newspaper is printed in Harrisburg. It is under new management—enlarged, handsome, bold in the right, fearless in denouncing wrong; it is always and unswervingly Democratic. It is the only Democratic newspaper at the state capital. It makes a specialty of Department news. It is the only paper in central Pennsylvania that receives and prints full Associated Press reports, sent direct to it over its own wires. It presents each day special correspondence from all points tributary to Harrisburg, all the Harrisburg news, fashion notes, household hints, domestic recipes, society gossip, scientific, political and humorous articles, short stories and sketches. Its market reports are complete, both as to finance and commerce. Its live stock markets are prepared specially for THE PATRIOT, and have only been successfully imitated by one other newspaper in the state. The Saturday sermon of Rev. Dr. Spurgeon, of London, is a great feature.
The Patriot,
THE PATRIOT wants the rascals turned out or locked up. To this end it heartily urges the election of Wright and Tilden as the only means to stop the the plundering of the public treasury.
THE WEEKLY PATRIOT, 8 pages, is only $1 a year. It maintains the best features of the daily, including the Spurgeon sermon. First take your home paper, then it. Send for circulars and sample copies (free) of either daily or weekly.
Liberal rates for campaign or otherwise.
Address,
THE PATRIOT COMPANY,
D. A. ORR, President. Harrisburg, Pa.
JOHN C. ORR, Treasurer.

—It would be a great satisfaction to the people if the election officers in the different districts throughout the county would, on the night of the election, compute the returns of the county ticket first. The people all over the county are interested in the returns from the county ticket and if the votes on the state ticket should be counted first it would be very late before the result would be known.

Oak lumber that a few years ago sold from $10 to $15 is now worth from $30 to $60, and at the rate it is being slaughtered it will be hard to get at any price. The thirty-second charges him with abstracting funds. It is thought that the total amount of his shortage will reach nearly $100,000.

—Counterfeit silver dollars of the issue of 1890, of which glass is the principal component, have been discovered at the United States sub-treasury in Philadelphia. Nearly all the bogus dollars came from the banks, where the receiving tellers had taken them for genuine. The touch and ring are perfect, but they are lighter in weight and thicker than the genuine dollar. They do not have a spurious look, even after short use, but retain the finish and lustre of the genuine coin. Some of the coins are of 1888 and 1889 date.

—One of our leaders says that Candidate Barker called on a number of the members of the Independent Republican Club in the Thirteenth Ward yesterday evening to solicit their votes. He says that, even if his brother was a member of the ring whose methods they opposed, he hoped they would not slaughter him on that account. The gentleman quoted says that nothing the politicians may have to say will influence the members of this club, as they have fully made up their minds as to what they intend to do.—Johnstown Herald.

A west bound train had stopped to switch a car, when another freight train moving in the same direction, ran into it. —Some people in the country are under the impression that Ludwigs' woolen mill in this place is not working on account of the damage done by the late fire in that establishment. The mill was repaired within a week after the fire and is now doing more and better work than ever, while the danger from fire is reduced to a minimum since the other members of the firm make Sam keep his head covered while working in the mill.

—On Friday last two young girls, whose homes are near Coalport, in Clearfield county, were arrested in Johnstown while masquerading in boy's clothes. The girls when arrested gave the names of Edward Wills and Billy King and were supposed to be two boys that had recently escaped from the Hundtingdon Reformatory. On being taken to the police station and questioned by the officers they broke down, acknowledged they were girls and had run off from home and donned male attire for the purpose of getting along better while travelling. Edward Wills right name was Annie Johns, aged seventeen, and Billy King was Florence Morrison, aged eighteen, and their parents are neighbors living about three miles from Coalport. Telegrams were sent to the parents of the girls and on Saturday their respective fathers went to Johnstown and took them home.

A Grand Entertainment.

On this (Friday) evening a combination of talent consisting of Misses Fannie Wilson, Blanche McCarthey, Grace Furey, Miss Wilson's little sister, known as the "Wonderful Child Singer," and Mr. Houck in his great act, "Silence and Fun," will give an entertainment in the Ebensburg opera house. Miss Wilson, a graduate of Loretto Abbey, Canada, and Miss McCarthey, a graduate of the Boston Conservatory of Music, are well known as stars in their line. Miss Fury is already known to our people as an elocutionist. The "Wonderful Child Singer," and Mr. Houck in his amusing and comical part, will complete an entertainment worthy of the support of our people. Those wishing to attend an entertainment that is instructive, entertaining and interspersed with plenty of wit and comedy, should not fail to be present. Tickets now on sale at James' drug store.

A Woman Killed at Morrellville.

Mrs. Ella Kratzer, wife of John Kratzer, of Morrellville, was struck by the second section of Western Express on Saturday morning at the railroad crossing in that place and instantly killed. Mrs. Kratzer had left her home a few minutes before with the intention of going to Johnstown on the street cars, and when the reached the railroad she found the crossing blocked by a freight train. She waited until the last car of the freight train had passed, when she stepped across without looking, in front of the second section of Western Express, and in a moment was hurled off the track. The train was stopped and the poor woman picked up but life was extinct. She was about fifty-nine years of age and is survived by a husband and two daughters.

Had an Arm Torn Off.

A daughter of Mr. Levi Cook, of Shade township, met with a terrible accident on Wednesday of last week. She is about thirteen years of age and was feeding a cider mill, worked by horse power on the farm of a Mr. Walker, in Stonycreek township, and while in the act of pushing down the apples in the mill with a paddle, the paddle was caught between the wheels pulling her hand and part of her arm in afterit. Her body came in contact with the mill and this saved her from having the entire arm drawn into the machinery. As a result of the accident her right arm was torn off near the elbow. She is now doing as well as could be expected from so severe an injury.—Somerset Democrat.

Misrepresenting Tickets.

A law on the statue books makes it an indictable offense to impose ballots upon voters said to contain the names of voters they wish to vote for, when, in fact, they contain the names of candidates to whom such voters are opposed. All deceptions, tricks and frauds of that kind are punishable. The law, which is now in force, says:

"Any person who shall furnish or supply to any elector of this commonwealth at any of the polls or voting places, any ticket falsely representing it to contain names thereon ..... shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall pay a fine not exceeding $100, and be imprisoned one year, or both, or either, at the discretion of the court."

Fall of the Leaf.

The bright, green foliage of summer which is now variegated with golden tints, and leafless trees will soon presage the coming of winter's chilly blasts. Nature has been more than usually lavish in her gifts and abundant crops make the heart of the husbandman glad. With the advance of fall it will be well for all to take proper safeguards against disease. A pure stimulant tones up the enfeebled system. For this purpose use Klein's world-famed "Silver Age" or "Duquesne" rye. Both are warranted absolutely pure. They sell respectively at $1.50 and $1.25 per full quart. Major Klein also sells six-year-old Guckenheimer, Gibson, Overholt, Finch, and Bear Creek at $1.00 per quart, or six quarts for $5.00. Goods shipped anywhere. Send for catalogue and price list, mentioning this paper, to Max Klein, 82 Federal street, Allegheny City, Pa.

The Coming Concert.

Friday evening, October 30th, is the date of the next concert to be held in the opera house in this place. The Altoona young ladies having in charge have prepared a splendid program and the readings and singing will be of a very high order. Miss Wilson is a splendid singer with few equals, and Miss Furey is a remarkably fine elocutionist and will give many humorous selections that will convulse all who hear her with laughter. Mary Wilson, the sweet child singer, and Mac Houck in his amusing specialties, will please the children immensely, as well as the grown folks. Be sure and give this fine array of talent a brilliant reception. Tickets, 35 cents; children, 15 cents. Tickets on sale at James' drug store.

—Vote the whole Democratic ticket and go home with a good conscience.

Miscellaneous Notices.

THE 25th annual session of the Teachers' Institute of Cambria county will be held in the Court House, Ebensburg, Pa., on November 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th.

On Monday evening Gen. D. H. Hastings will lecture on "Education and Citizenship."

On Tuesday evening the Ariel-Thomas Combination, a musical organization, will give an entertainment. Every person in Ebensburg should attend it. Below is an extract from the Boston Herald:

The Ariel Quartette, at the Star Course concert, last Mondny evening, showed what constant practice will do for good voices. Their uniformity and rich blending as a quartette was at once satisfying and surprising. Some of their numbers were done in an original and "catchy" manner that took the audience by storm, and on the whole they can rank themselves as one of the first ladies' quartettes in New England.

On Wednesday evening Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., will lecture on "Backbone." Here is what S. Henson, D. D., said of him at a banquet at the Grand Pacific Hotel, Chicago:

I always feel, after hearing Dixon, as if I had been on a spree (laughter), and wanted to go on another (renewed laughter), for I see angels instead of snakes, legions of angels. You saw them, didn't you? Do you know how it is that Dixon comes to be so eloquent? I have the secret. He was brought up in a state concerning which I learned from Olney's geography, a great while ago, that its principal commodities were tar, pitch, turpentine and lumber. Now, what a mass of combustibles! And they are all bound up in Dixon, and fired with genious. That is the reason why he blazes so." (Laughter.)

On Thursday evening Jahu De Witt Miller will deliver a lecture on the "Uses of Ugliness.' The Wooster, Ohio, correspondence of the Mansfield Daily Herald, on February 26th, 1887, contained the following:

A full house greeted Jahu De Witt Miller, the lecturer, at the opera house last night. Mr. Miller is a brilliant talker and his lecture abounded in wit and good common sense. Those who failed to hear Mr. Miller missed the greatest treat of the season.

THE Protection Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Cambria county at a meeting of the Directors held September 18 1891, passed a resolution the substance of which is as follows. This company will not be liable for any loss caused by use of a steam thresher, steam hay press, nor other steam engine on the premises, nor for any loss, where such engine has been used, occurring within twelve hours after the fire has been removed from the furnace.

EMERGENCY REMEDIES.

Facts Showing That Every Trade Has Its Special Physic.

Many Strange and Simple Cures Not Practiced Among Physicians—Fish and Eel Skins for Rheumatism.

Every man to his trade. A man is either a fool or a physician at forty. Here are two ancient adages which suggest a combination. Every trade has its special physic. This is true. In conversation the other day with a Recorder reporter a New York surgeon remarked that few things gave more pain, attended with so much danger, as some particles of lime dust in the eye. A gentleman standing by quietly remarked: "And yet such an accident is of daily occurrence, is attended hardly with any danger, and is most easily treated." "How so?" came a chorus of voices.

"Well, I will tell you. I was brought up to the trade of a plasterer—a ceiling plasterer. You may not know that the final layer upon a good ceiling is almost pure lime. The plasterer stands upon a platform and lays on the paste. It falls upon him in every direction, and, especially if he is a new hand, often a spatter falls right into his eye. When he gets accustomed to the work the eyelid seems to get used to it, too, and seems to close automatically in self-defense. Directly such an accident occurs a fellow-workman takes a mouthful of water from the nearest pail—and there is always a pail of water handy—opens the eye as wide as possible and squirts with all his force the contents of his mouth against the eyeball. This immediately cools the lime and also drives it out of the eye. Simple remedy, isn't it, and eminently practical. But you see a man's eye would be burned out long before he could reach the nearest doctor's."

Immediately other gentlemen had something to tell. One was a wine merchant. "My cellarmen have a funny way of stopping bleeding. They think nothing of a cut finger or hand, or even a large wound. They run to the nearest spirit cask, or claret if spirits are not handy, and let a few drops fall on the wound. It acts as an immediate styptic. Then a big dusty old cobweb is taken from the nearest bottle or corner of a bin, and clapped on tight over the cut or abrasion. Cobwebs are splendid healing agents."

"Sailors," said another, "are never at a loss under such circumstances: their favorite styptic at sea is a bit of unraveled tarred rope. On land they will take the quid of tobacco from their cheek or the lining of their cap, and the effect is astonishing. But I have seen a man wild drunk after such a quid had been tied over the wound. I suppose the nicotine gets into the blood and acts as an intoxicant."

"Carpenters," said another gentleman, "if they cut themselves, pick up a handful of fine shavings and clap them on to the wound, and joiners smear a dab of glue; but one of the quaintest things I ever saw used was by an old farmer up in Chester county. He got his hand badly torn by a bit of old wire fence, and he bled considerably. Without a thought he stooped down and dug up a handful of soil, spat on it, and worked it quickly into a paste, and laid it on the wound and bound it up with his neckerchief. In an astonishingly short time he was at work again as if nothing had happened."

"Can anyone tell me the therapeutical value of fasting spittle?" asked a quiet man. "I know that old wives, as the saying is, take great stock in it for warts, birthmarks, corns, bruises, and even small cuts. Indeed, old nurses seem to believe that their saliva in the morning before taking food is a panacea for every kind of skin complaint. But did you ever hear of an old beaver or silk hat being used as a styptic? You will find it a capital one, and for burns and scalds, if placed over the wound in sufficient quantity to keep out the air, it will draw out the heat rapidly, as any hat manufacturer will vouch."

"We are getting a little off the track," said one, "when we talk of fasting spittle; deep sea fishermen and fishmongers generally hold that nothing is better than a piece of fish skin. Eel skins are commonly used to cure rheumatism, and are considered infallible by some. A negro minstrel once told me that nothing stopped bleeding and assisted nature's healing work so well as burned cork. Thus every trade and profession has its own emergency remedies, as the doctor called them just now, and doubtless the list might be extended to every trade known."

WIGS A PENAL OFFENSE.

The Ancient Blue Laws Just Revived in the Transvaal Republic.

Ladies who have been accustomed to heighten their charms by the wiles of the toilet table had better keep away from the Transvaal. They would not be long in Pretoria before they got into serious trouble. The second chamber of the volksraad has passed and sent up to the first chamber a masks and disguises bill, which will press severely upon ladies (and gentlemen, too) who are not physically what they seem. Whoever wears a wig, for instance, and is caught in the dreadful act, may be fined ten pounds or sent to prison for a fortnight.

An exception will perhaps be made in favor of actors and actresses while they are on the stage. Presumably it will also be an offense to wear a mask or go about on stilts; but those are amusements in which people do not want to indulge every day. With all the details of this highly moral bill we are not familiar; but if it prohibits wigs, it must surely condemn that artistic heightening of the complexion to which so many ladies are (perhaps erroneously) supposed to owe something. The Puritan fathers of the Transvaal may as well do the thing thoroughly while they are about it.

Ancient Beginning of Will Forms.

Nearly every will filed with the recorder begins: "In the name of God amen." This fashion may not be as old as the hills, but it dates back to a time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. It is as old as the English laws, and was handed down to posterity by the priests, who in the olden times were about the only ones who could read and write. In those days, when a man felt his joints beginning to stiffen, when his feet showed signs of becoming gouty, and he realized he was nearing the pearly gates, the priest was called in and the will made. This custom still prevails, although the modern lawyer and not the priest does the draughting of testamentary documents.

An Age Detective.

The latest fad has taken a firm hold upon the girls of Philadelphia, says the Record. The idea seems absurd, but there are many who have firm faith in the efficacy of the test. If you would like to try it, pull a hair out of a girl's head and tie on the end of it a gold ring of the engagement variety. Fill a glass partly full of water, and over it, just inside the glass, suspend the ring. Just as sure as shooting, according to the convinced faddist, the ring will swing against the side of the glass and clink out the number of years contained in the age of the person from whose head the hair is taken. It is said to be equally as reliable in telling the ages of dumb animals as well as human beings.

The explosion of a bomb is not more sudden or unlooked for than the attack of some malignant disease which would not occur were the blood in order. To impure blood is due a great variety of ills that make life a burden.

All the year round, you may rely upon Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to purify the blood and invigorate the system. It's not like the sarsaparillas, that are said to be good for the blood in March, April and May. The "Discovery" works equally well at all times, and in all cases of blood-taints, or humors, no matter what their name or nature.

It's the cheapest blood-purifier, sold through druggists, because you only pay for the good you get.

Your money is returned if it doesn't benefit or cure you.

Can you ask more?

"Is life worth living?" "That depends on the liver." Dr. Pierce's Pellets are the best Liver Pills.

PASTOR KOENIG'S TRADE MARK NERVE TONIC

Perfectly Well.

FILLMORE, Dubuque Co., Ia., Sept., 1889.

Miss K. Finnigan writes: My mother and sister used Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic for neuralgia. They are both perfectly well now and never tired of praising the tonic.

It Was Indeed a Miracle.

384 FIRST ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y., Aug. 3, '90.

I wish to state what a wonderful benefit Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic has been to my brother, who has suffered from rheumatism since 1885 and has not been able to work of any kind since that time. He has tried all kinds of patent medicines and different doctors of skill, but all without benefit until he took the Tonic. He has continually improved since and I will say and hundreds besides me who have seen him during his sickness, that it was indeed a miracle to see him restored to health.

A QUEER FISH.

Uneatable Itself, It Poisons All the Fish in Its Neighborhood.

The anglers and lovers of fish about Park Rapids, Minn., are much disgusted and seriously alarmed over the appearance of numbers of a peculiar fish in the lakes and ponds of that vicinity, and which fish is said to be highly poisonous. The best naturalists, as well as the oldest and most experienced fishermen of the neighborhood, have declared that they are at a loss to name the strange fish, which are so voracious that they swallow all bait as soon as placed in the water and prevent others from biting, while wholly uneatable themselves. It is also believed that they are exterminating the other varieties, as immense quantities of the latter are found dead every day along the shores of the lakes and ponds.

The unknown member of the finny tribe is not unlike a small trout, very plump and very tender, with few bones and those large. It is, however, nearly black in color, except the under parts, where it is of a metallic gray, mixed with gold, and a few red blotches near the fins and about the head. It presents a handsome appearance in the water, about the surface of which it delights to linger, making it very easy game. Eaten it has a pleasant flavor, but will produce violent pains in the stomach, which, if not allayed, precede death only a few hours. How these fish came into the lakes no one knows, but they first appeared about two weeks ago, after a heavy fall of rain, when many firmly believe they accompanied it.

APPEALED TO THE GOVERNOR.

A Lady Asks to Have the Monterey Maze Torn Up.

The maze in the Del Monte Gardens in Monterey, Cal., is so elaborate that visitors frequently get lost in it. "I shall not forget," said a tourist to a New York Tribune reporter, "the exasperation of the wife of a prominent United States senator who determined to solve the intricacies of the maze. She is elderly and inclined to be stout, and was warned that she might find it a difficult matter to get out of the maze. She scouted the idea and marched in. Then there was trouble. She was in there fully an hour before she could find the center of it, and, worse still, she could not find her way out. A young nephew of hers was in the center and tried to explain to his aunt how to get in. She finally lost all patience and exclaimed, with heat: 'Don't talk to me any longer. I'll find my way alone. She was finally escorted out and, looking back at the maze, said: 'When I get east, I'll tell Mr. Huntington to have that nasty thing torn up. They have no right to put such affairs in a place intended for pleasure. Gracious me! shall I ever reach the hotel? I am almost dead.' And all the way to the hotel she vowed vengeance against that maze and longed to have the sympathetic ear of the great railway millionaire."

GOOD OLD ANGLO-SAXON.

The Virile Words Becoming a Fashion Among Our Young Collegians.

The craze for everything English is reaching the colleges in the shape of Anglo-Saxon lunacy. A boy of mine recently came home from school in the east, says a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and when we were one day driving together he spoke of the horse as "brack." "What's brack?" I inquired, for I thought it must be some new slang word the youngster had picked up, when, to my enlightenment, he explained that it was Saxon for active. On further inquiry I found that he was full of such expressions, having learned them from a teacher who was an Anglo-Saxon enthusiast. Superannuated was, in his dialect, "overweary," the horizon was the "sky edge," magnificent was "highdeedy," a quarrel was a "brangle," a proud man was "overmindy," and a street car was a "folk wain." I explained to him in sorrow that he was living in the west, where such profundity of wisdom went unappreciated, and that if he should happen to ask a policeman when the "folk wain" that went by "fire ghost" came along, the guardian of the peace would never imagine he was inquiring about an electric street car, but would take charge of him as a lunatic. "Folk wain" may be good enough for Boston, but it will hardly answer west of the Hudson.

CHANGE OF OCCUPATION.

When Coupled with Preoccupation Does Not Always Bring Good Results.

The young man had been a groom at the riding school, and had also been employed at a sale stable, says a writer in River and Driver. Still, the knowledge that he had acquired at these places did not serve him well now that he was engaged as a clerk in a grocery store on Sixth avenue.

One day a young lady came into the store and asked the clerk if they had any horseradish.

"Hossradish? I should say we have," exclaimed the young man. "We probably have the most remarkable hossradish in the market," and he pulled down a bottle, covered with the dust of ages, and rolled it along the counter.

"Observe its gait," he continued, with enthusiasm. "There's a hossradish that I can recommend. There's an A No. 1 family hossradish. I can warrant it to work anywhere. It will drag a family carriage, on a heavy track, in 2:40."

The young lady looked at the clerk with some astonishment. She wanted the horseradish, however, and ventured to ask if it was strong.

"Strong?" echoed the clerk; "why, it's as strong as a steam stump puller. It's the strongest hossradish that ever looked through a collar. You can take it right out of your phaeton, after a whirl around Central park, hitch it to a stoneboat and if it doesn't pull more than a locomotive I'll knock it in the head. Fact is, it's a heavy-draught hossradish, with the swiftness and endurance of a Salvator."

"I meant to ask," said the young lady, somewhat confused, "if it is sharp—does it bite?"

"Bite? No; it's gentle as a sucking dove; wouldn't bite the smallest child. It seems kind o' sad like when it has to take a bite in its mouth. Oh, no; it wouldn't bite a piece of molasses candy. And kick? You couldn't make that hossradish kick if you tickled it with a straw," and the clerk punched the bottle in the ribs as proof of its excellent disposition.

The young lady did not seem entirely satisfied with the recommendation and took the bottle up to examine it more closely. "That's right," said the affable young man; "look it over carefully. Examine it closely for ringbone, spavin, quartercrack, heaves, thumps, mumps, dumps, grumps, or anything else under the shining sun. If you find it is not as sound as a dollar, the hossradish is yours without costing you a red cent and with a nice set of silver-mounted harness thrown in. Shall I wrap it up?"

The young lady said she would not take it along now, but might call later with a halter to lead it home.

QUEER RESULTS.

Some Very Odd Facts About the Numerals Three and Seven.

John W. Kirk, the white-haired veteran who was with Morse when the first working telegraph line was stretched and who stood beside the great inventor when the first message was transmitted from Annapolis Junction to Washington, has made during his life a great many interesting calculations in numbers, says the Boston Transcript. The two most remarkable numbers in the world are 3 and 7.

"The numeral seven," says Mr. Kirk, "the Arabians got from India, and all following have taken it from the Arabians. It is conspicuous in Biblical lore, being mentioned over 300 times in the Scriptures, either alone or compounded with other words. It seems a favorite numeral with the Divine mind, outside as well as inside the Bible, as nature demonstrates in many ways, and all the other numerals bow to it. There is also another Divine favorite, the number three, the trinity. This is brought out by a combination of figures that is somewhat remarkable. It is the six figures 142,857.

"Multiply this by 2, the answer is 285,714.

"Multiply this by 3, the answer is 428,571.

"Multiply this by 4, the answer is 571,428.

"Multiply this by 5, the answer is 714,285.

"Multiply this by 6, the answer is 857,142.

"Each answer contains the same figures as the original sum, and no others, and three of the figures of the sum remain together in each answer, thus showing that figures preserve the trinity.

"Thus 285 appears in the first and second numbers, 571 in the second and third, 428 in the third and fourth, and 142 in the fourth and fifth.

"It is also interesting to note that taking out of any two of these sums the group of three common to both, the other three, read in the usual order, from left to right, will also be in the same order in both sums.

"Take the first and second sums, for example. The group of 285 is common to both. Having read 285 out of the second sum, read right along and bring in the first figure of the thousands last. It will read 714. All the others will read in the same way.

"Again, note that the two groups of three in the first sum are the same as the two groups of three in the fourth reversed in order, and the same thing is true of the second and third. The last multiplication has its groups of three the same as those of the original number, reversed again.

"Examine these results again, and you will see that in these calculations all the numerals have appeared save the nine. Now multiply the original sum by the mighty 7—the divine favorite of the Bible and of creation—and behold the answer! The last of the numerals, and that one only in groups of three—again the trinity!

$$\begin{array}{r} 142{,}857 \\ 7 \\ \hline 999{,}999 \end{array}$$

"No other combination of numbers will produce the same results. Does not this show the imperial multipotent numeral 7 and its divinity?"

IN THE WRONG HOTEL.

Awkward Predicament of an American Lady Through a Porter's Blunder.

Most of us have at one time or another experienced the inconvenience of not being acquainted with the language of the country wherein one is traveling. One can, therefore, says the London Standard, sympathize with the Washington lady whose misadventure while staying at Aix-les-Bains for the benefit of her health has found its way into print. The lady in question took the baths like most of the other visitors at the health resort. The bath over, the patient, as is known, is rapidly dried, well enveloped in sheets and blankets and conveyed back to the hotel in a species of sedan chair. On reaching it he or she is laid into bed, wound up in the blankets like a mummy and, after being covered up with yet additional blankets and a quilt, is left to perspire for a certain period, longer or shorter, according to taste.

The American lady, an unmarried woman, was but imperfectly acquainted with the pronunciation of the French language, and when, lately, after her bath, she told the attendant to take her to "No. 11 at the hotel des Princes," he understood her to say the hotel de France. There she was conveyed, placed in bed in room eleven and left to perspire. After awhile she removed slightly the covering from her head to perceive, with the utmost distress, that she was in a strange bed, with no other dress save her blanket and that all around the room were articles of clothing, etc., proving the occupant thereof to belong to the opposite sex. The poor lady's state of mind may easily be imagined.

THE catacombs of Paris contain the remains of about 3,000,000 human beings. They were formerly stone quarries. Many of the victims of the revolution of 1792-4 are buried there.

A GERMAN correspondent writes that French women are losing their skill in sewing, knitting and mending, and that these are becoming lost arts, specially in Paris, on account of machine work.

THE COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.

THUS far an aggregate of $2,695,000 has been appropriated by twenty-nine states for representation at the world's fair.

IT is probable that the cost of the Illinois state building will be reduced from the original estimate of $400,000 to $250,000, by the use of staff instead of stone.

H. C. PAYNE, special commissioner to Mexico, says that country will probably appropriate at the start $750,000 for the representation at the exposition, and that it will most likely increase the amount to $2,000,000 later on.

MINISTER PHELPS has hopes of inducing Baron Krupp to exhibit some of his immense guns at the exposition. Baron Krupp hesitates, for, he says, it will cost him $250,000 to make an exhibit creditable to his establishment.
